The American bark John Worstor reports left Newcastle on 19th Dec. with 892 tons of scal.

. Had fine weather and good wind until the 4th

January, when she experienced heavy Westerly winds and squalls. On 5th Jan. very heavy squalls and much rain, thunder and lightning.

4 p.m., same day had a very heavy squall, and ceeded in getting through it all night without any loss. Kept ship with short sail, weather looking had. 8 p.m. another very heavy squall, started to shorten sail, let got topsail hallards. The wind increased to the violence of a hurri-

HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 12TH, 1883.

In the extracts from the Diary of Theng How-YEH, the Minister to England and France-translated by Mr. JORDAN and published in the China Review-there are Canton. several notes which are of interest as showing the intelligence with which some Commander Lindsay, arrived here on Saturday of the educated Chinese watch the course of from a cruise. events in the West, and the views which they entertain with reference to foreign natalk with Chang Huan-Lun, "a young man "of great culture and no mean attainments." This gentleman submitted six propositions. which the Minister considered of such rare merit and of such depth of insight, and so different from the random assertions one often hears, that he reproduces them. the purpose of repelling Russian aggression, Having drawn an analogy between the state return, and of those still pending, together with of affairs with regard to Turkey and what a calendar of Probates and Administrations may happen with regard to China as affecting British interests in India, the young Gasette man mentioned by the Minister says:-"If " England puts forth all her might to pro-"tect Turkey, is it impossible she would Limited, arrived at Singapore on Saturday morn. "make some slight effort to aid China? "To this some may object, and say that "Bussia and England are alike in their ra-"pacious tendencies, and that there is no "likelihood of gaining England to our side. "This argument ignores the fact that Eug-"land, though still to outward appearance at a manufactory in Kent. "powerful, is gradually losing the substance "of ber strength, and that her present policy "is directed towards maintaining her Chang Shu-cheng is likely to be relieved ere high position by peaceful measures. She long by Liu Kun-yi. Chang Ta-jen is simply "is far different now from what she was in all precedent for an officer holding such a posi-"TAO KUANG'S reign, and there would be tion to have a substitute. "Ino difficulty in coming to an understand.

it is also another proof, if any were needed, that the Chinese only understand a policy a conciliatory attitude is misinterpreted by them. There is no reason to suppose that Takeng does not endorse the views of his friend. It is true he says, speaking of the six propositions generally, "the first, which. "deals with the relations of England and "Russin, cannot be accepted in its en-"tirely," but that, we take it, refers rather to the general question of the political relations and policy of the different countries concerned than to the particular opinion conveyed in the paragraph we have quoted. It is, however, a hopeful sign to see the Chinese exercising reasonable intelligence and observation in regard to matters beyond the confines of the Middle Kingdom, and though for the time being they may be led to erroneous conclusions, a better state of knowledge will be reached in due course England is no less powerful now than she was twenty-five years ago; the difference is that we then had a PALMERSTON at the belm of affairs and now a GLADSTONE. The one believed in a vigorous foreign policy, the other adheres to a conciliatory or "giving-in" policy, and the consequence is that the Chinese think that "England, though still to out ~ward-appearance-powerful,-is-gradually "losing the substance of her strength," and that "she is far different now from what she "was in Tao Knang's reign." This, however, was said before the Egyptian campaign had taken place. That campaign, though the measure of glory it reflects on the country is limited, was yet sufficient to show that England is still able to strike on occasion, and that the peace-at-any-price party are no

all powerful in the country. From another note of Tsenc's, headed "Western arts and civilization derived from China," it would seem that the Minister has but little faith in the permanent character of the progress of Europe. In epigramatic terms he says :- "In early times China had "no lack of mechanical appliances, but, as "her material prosperity gradually declined, "her people fell into idle and thriftless habits, and the mechanical art was lost in "transmission. As by a glance at what " was, so by noting what China now is, we may learn what Europe will one day Western workcraft, now so deft, will grow inopt, and Western ingenuity "fact is, the earth's productions, being "limited, are not sufficient to provide for though the Annamese troops there are badly the manifold wants of its countless people "and deterioration is one of nature's laws." analogous position to the Europe, or as w traditions of her own people; no trace of can be found outside her own boundaries. If England as "the great world spins forever down the ringing grooves of change the world's progress, her glorious inheritance will only be handed down to the descendants of those of her children who have founded a "Greater Britain" in the vast dependencies or ex-dependencies of the island Kingdom. Nanking recently received a private letter from It has been said that this is the iron age, and that England is as superior in mechanical science as she is inferior to ancient Rome in civic virtue or to ancient Greece in pestheri culture. But it is not in mechanical science alone that England stands pre-emi nent: she has ever been the champion an advance guard of liberty, and the reputation for the Southern Ports-may be divided between the table. she has to hand down to future ages is brighter than that of any of the ancient nations. The influence of Rome and Greece is still palpably present in the life of Europe to-day, and in like manner but lin retaining his post as Director-General of the greater measure the influence of England will be active for all time. But where are tering the Liang Kiang in the place of Tso. the traces to be found of the past influence of China? Toung, like most other Chinese. makes the mistake of directing his eye backward instead of forward. Let him and his charged him with being a chino-ming, or convert compatriots, instead of deluding themselves to Catholicism, and it is this which has done with the idea that Europe is walking in the former steps of China strive to follow in the and it was only at the express instance of Li steps of Europe, and so instead of an apochryphal past greatness their country may Travelling on one occasion from Canton to San Ning I was struck at the sight, in cortain looslities, of hedges made of Cactus plants. In his "Excursions in the considerable way round the town of Anleyman). by gardens and plantations of the elive, divided Barff's final over was a bit of ouriosity; with his from each other by thick hadres of the Opunlia? or Cactus. This makes a most effectual barricade against the animals, whether wild or tame which frequently rove at large in Eastern lands.

When Sir Garnet and his gallant army were n Egypt, we read on one occasion of their going to the review with aprign of heather in the helnets. Some people probably wondered how the Highland lads managed to obtain their native and much loved plant in the sands of Egypt but Temple tells us that he found " the country near Carthage | covered with a thick growth of heath, mastic, cleander, and a variety of other other places besides Scotland.

The skin of a snake enters, as overyone knows, into the materix medica of the Chinese. The emissaries sent by her are said, however, to have been fright. ened from carrying out their deadly work by seeing a snake glide cut from under the pillow on which the head of Britannicus lay. Opium smokers stand a poor chance with the people think that the habit is ineradicable, but know for a fact that it is not. It is only weak-minded-people who cannot resist the temptation, and who can never be cured. Determined people get clear of it, with a struggle, but many object to struggle, for anything except opium, when the craving comes on them. It is therefore not to be wondered at that opium smokers make such poor officers. They are usually weak-minded people, unfit for anything, and generally untrustworthy. It is astonishing what a great number of the officials are enslaved by the drug; they are more numerous than those that abstain. Very few have given up smoking, although many have attempted to do so, and some have reduced the quantity they formerly smoked. Some again, only smoke at night, and do without it in the day time by the assistance of drugs and some stimulating pills, usually made of deer's velvety horns, and ginsong -with some other ingredients, tempered with honey. Opium pipes are, however, exposed for sale everywhere, as well as lamps and all the other necessary instruments for smoking. Sellers of anti-opium medicines, I imagine, make less money than sollers of opium.—N. C. Daily News Correspondent.
